- assess your eligibility for legal aid
- help your lawyer with your legal representation
- update your personal details in our records
- evaluate our services.

LAQ also gives statistical information, after removing names of applicants, to the Australian Government Attorney-General's Department.

Your information will not be given to any other person or agency unless you give us permission or we are required by law.

About legal aid

It is important you understand the terms and conditions of legal aid that apply to you, if you are granted aid.

Conditions

- Legal aid is granted according to the Legal Aid Queensland Act 1997 and guidelines set by the state and federal governments, and other conditions you and your lawyer will be told about.
- We can stop or change your grant of aid if you do not meet these conditions.

Financial contributions

- You may have to pay some money towards your legal costs.
- You may have to pay some or all the costs we incur on your behalf if you keep property or you get money or property because of your grant of aid.

Legal costs

- You may have to pay any legal costs the court orders against you. You can ask us to pay the costs ordered against you.
- It is your responsibility to pay any legal costs you may owe to anyone who has done legal work for you before your grant of aid starts.
- If you are awarded any money because of the legal work we do for you (eg a compensation or settlement payment), it will be held in your lawyer's trust account until we assess if you owe Legal Aid Queensland any money.

Your lawyer

- You cannot change your lawyer without our agreement. If we agree, you may have to pay any costs involved with changing lawyers.
- If your application is approved you cannot choose your own lawyer.
- We can stop your grant of aid if you do not follow your lawyer's advice.
- We can ask any lawyer acting for you, or who has acted for you before, to give us information relevant to your grant of aid.

Providing information

You must tell us immediately if:

- you change your address while you are getting legal aid
- financial or other details set out in your application change
- you become aware of information likely to affect your eligibility to get legal aid or the conditions on which legal aid is granted.

It is an offence to make a false or misleading statement or fail to give information about your application. You may be fined or imprisoned for doing so.

How legal aid works

After you submit your legal aid application, you will be sent a letter telling you:

- if you have been granted legal aid
- what the grant is for
- any conditions on the grant.

If you are granted legal aid, you will also be sent an information sheet explaining how your grant works and how you can make the most of it. Please read it carefully.

If a Legal Aid Queensland lawyer is handling your case, you will be told who is managing your file. You should ask your file manager any questions you have.

If a private lawyer is handling your case, you should ask that lawyer any questions you have. If you still have concerns after talking to your lawyer, call Legal Aid Queensland on 1300 65 11 88.
